Tooth Nourishment Requires Vitamins A, C and D Tooth Beauty Demands Daily Grooming

It is good that the layman is now informed which foods build strong, sound teeth. Many of our adult tooth ailments might have been avoided had we in infancy been fed liberal amounts by Vitamins A, C and D. And young mothers will do well to learn which foods contain these vitamins and see that they are included in their children's daily menus.

Milk is the best source of calcium, phosphorus and Vitamin A. From tomatoes and citrus fruits, such as oranges, lemons and grape fruit, come the needed supplies of Vitamin C. It is difficult to get enough calcium, phosphorus, and Vitamins A and C without using liberal amounts of milk and either citrus fruits or tomatoes.

Vitamin D is made by the body when the skin gets enough sunshine. It is also present in milk, egg yolk, and in a few other foods, but it is not found in large amounts except in cod-liver and halibut-liver preparations.

Avoid Excess Of Sweets

What few mothers insist upon is the limitation of sweets in their children's diet. An excess of sweet foods should be avoided for two good reasons. Sweet foods spoil the normal appetite so the child is denied the more essential foods for tooth building. They also aid in the formation of gummy plaques at the necks of the teeth which encourage the growth of acid-forming bacteria which destroy the teeth.

Take These Precautions

Twice a year have a thorough mouth examination by a good dentist. Do not wait until a tooth ails and drives you to him. Frequently a small inexpensive filling will save a tooth for years, whereas if you permit the tooth to go until you are conscious of a sharp ache or a jumping nerve you may lose it long before you should.

Witty Kitty

When a couple of girls are at a loss to know what to do when followed by a man they might solve the problem by matching for him.

EWO BEER

A grand week-end is this novel bristle tooth brush which screws to its protective case making a firm handle. It comes in a novel travel kit which also contains tooth cleansing powder.

Most of the larger cities have dental clinics which charge minimum fees to those unable to meet the ordinary fees of dentists. And many schools now offer free tooth examination to students once a year.

If you smoke, use a cigarette holder to prevent the nicotine from depositing on the inner side of your lower teeth. If you will not use a holder go to your dentist regularly each month to have this deposit removed.

Home Care For All

Of course it is taken for granted that you brush your teeth daily. But that is not sufficient to keep them clean.

Daily mouth grooming includes (1) a good mouth rinsing with an antiseptic lotion, (2) dental floss to remove food stuffs from between the teeth, (3) a brushing after each meal with a powder or paste in the direction in which your teeth grow (up and down, not from the left to the right), (4) it is important to massage the gums with your brush or with your fingers.

Your baby's teeth may be kept clean by wiping them with a fresh cloth moistened with a solution of bicarbonate of soda and boiled water.

Adults may use common table salt or baking soda for rinsing the mouth and brushing the teeth.

TENSION BEHIND OUTWARD CALM

NAZIS LANDING MUNITIONS IN DANZIG AT NIGHT

Danzig, To-day.

A speech by the Nazi leader, Herr Foerster, in which he declared that the people of Danzig wished and would return to the Reich, was delivered at the Nazi district party day celebration yesterday, arranged some time ago. The speech was interrupted by wild applause.

The streets yesterday morning presented the normal Sunday appearance, except for the conspicuous absence of men of military age and uniformed figures among the strolling crowds. All men of military age are "on duty."

Only exceptions were soldiers visiting the Free City for the reunion of the 2nd West Prussian Field Artillery, Regiment No. 36.

TRIPLE ALLIANCE

Ground Being Cleared

London, To-day.

A LONG report has been received by the Foreign Office from Sir William Seeds, our Ambassador in Moscow, on his conversation with the Soviet Foreign Commissar, M. Molotov, on the proposed triple alliance.

It is expected, says Reuter's diplomatic correspondent, that another meeting will take place at an early date.

The ground is being cleared for all possible misunderstandings regarding problems involved by the question of guarantees to smaller States, says Reuter.

Trans-Ocean adds that Sir William Seeds' report will be dealt with at the meeting of the Cabinet foreign affairs committee this morning.

Former and present members of the Regiment marched from Hohesigen barracks to the War Memorial for a short commemoration service, and were then dismissed.

The trim grey-green figures drew many approving glances, although soldiers in German uniform are now no longer a novelty in the streets of Danzig.

BARBED WIRE

Green and ripe corn is now being out and gathered, and barbed wire entanglements are being hastily constructed in its place on the German side of the Polish-German frontier, in the district of Firchan, along the Corridor.

Orders from the Polish and German sides to avoid small incidents which might precipitate action, are being scrupulously observed by everyone.

There is a superficial calm, but the tension behind the scenes is reflected in the crowded barracks — to which Danzigers are not yet sufficiently accustomed to pass by without stopping to watch the drilling of newly-landed and the older soldiers — anti-aircraft guns on Bishop's Hill, high pressure reconditioning of existing fortresses and construction of new fortresses and barracks, and lightning landing of munitions at night time under a curtain of secrecy.

POLES CONFIDENT

Polish circles say they know that all this is going on and can confidently wait.

The Nazis deny that these events have any sinister intent.

What The Stars Foretell

By MARY BLAKE

It will be poor judgment to express your opinion in too forceful a manner and advisable to defer as much as possible to the wishes of other people this day. Co-operation will be essential to obtaining satisfactory results, particularly in promoting social activities. Self-indulgence will be responsible for indisposition. In the carrying out of personal plans this day, haste will fail to accomplish what deliberation is apt to make possible. This is a poor day to impose any kind of a strain on the tempers of your friends and relatives. Married and engaged couples as well as those who are about to become engaged, must be careful not to let jealousy be a disturbing influence this day.

If a woman and July 3 is your birthday, you are apt to be very impulsive, sympathetic and romantic. Ambition may lead you to a very profitable professional or business connection. One of the arts, perhaps, music, may be the cause of your attracting flattering attention. You should have exceptionally fine reasoning powers. Your ability to make and save money will serve you well throughout your life. An excessive amount of pride might be one of your handicaps. By playing a musical instrument, singing, dancing, newspaper work, acting or selling, you may become very prosperous. The indications are that you will be very fortunate in your selection of a husband.

The child born on July 3, is frequently extremely fastidious particularly in regard to wearing apparel. Neatness most likely will be one of this youngster's outstanding characteristics. Children born on this date are generally very lucky and select for a career activities abounding in opportunities to make money and a good reputation.

Well-Cut Slacks And Shirt

Be sure to include this free-and-easy play outfit in your vacation wardrobe. It's perfect for all sorts of active sports — casual, smart and comfortable. The shirt, severely tailored, with big patch pockets and straight sleeves, may be worn with your suits, too. The slacks fit unusually well, because they are pleated at the waistline, in front, for slimmess and flatness over the diaphragm.

Make this shirt-and-slacks suit of some sturdy material like denim, gabardine, broadcloth or flannel. The shirt, of course, is also smart in linen, striped silk or pique.

It's All In The Carpet

Three qualities should be sought in a floor covering—appearance; durability; satisfactory reaction to cleaning methods.

Appearance involves not merely the attractiveness of the rug or carpet, independently considered, but its fitness for the decorative scheme of its room. This is mainly a matter of colour, but not wholly so. Patterns and textures express periods, degrees, of formality, and special activities of the rooms for which they are chosen. Unless in style with the furniture, fabrics and ornaments, and suited to the room's use, carpets tend to detract from the total effect of the decoration.

The wearing qualities of a carpet or rug depend largely on its material. Wool, jute, cotton, linen and rayons are all used. No yarn has the resiliency or wearing qualities of wool, so this is chosen for the pattern yarn of high-grade carpets. The United States imports carpet wools from 40 countries, thus acquiring 15 qualities. These differ much in resiliency. To demonstrate the variation, at a recent symposium for the press, a carpet manufacturer put into two cylinders wads of wool. One wad was of the highest grade, the other of an inferior grade. Then both were compressed and shortly released. The superior wool sprang up, like a Jack-in-the Box, to its original height, while the lower grade expanded only slowly and did not in the end attain its original height.

Fibre elasticity gives to a carpet softness and springiness, so that even when subjected to the weight of heavy furniture and insistence of footfalls, it will refuse for a long time to mat, break and wear thin.

Six basis weaves are employed for carpets, but among them the Wilton and Axminster (also called Moquette) are to-day's favourites. Wilton is like the old-fashioned "body Brussels" except that its warp is cut, producing a higher pile. It was designed to imitate hand-knotted pile rugs of the Orient and is the weave of the great majority machine-made orientals. The mechanism of it makes it impossible to introduce more than six colours.

Axminster is a looser, softer weave and has unlimited colour possibilities.

NEW REGULATIONS TO STIMULATE
CHINA'S EXPORTS

Chungking, To-day.

At the same time that China's imports are being restricted, Dr. H. H. Kung, President of the Executive Yuan and Minister of Finance, announced late last night further important liberalization of the regulations governing the nation's exports in order to stimulate production and the export trade.

In view of the barter agreements and commodity credit agreements, wood oil, tea, bristles and mineral products will continue to be handled primarily by the Government trading organizations; but other export goods will be handled through ordinary channels of trade.

The exchange in respect of all exports, according to the announcement, is to be delivered to the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications at the official rates of exchange of the Central Bank of China, but exporters will receive a sum based upon the difference between the official rates and the rates jointly announced from time to time by the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications.

After arrangements have been made for the sale of the relative exchange to the Bank of China or the Bank of Communications, certi-ificates of customs clearance will be issued by these two banks.

In order to develop export trade, special efforts are being made to improve and co-ordinate transportation in the interior and to remove hindrances to the free movement of goods.

SPOKESMAN EXPLAINS

A spokesman of the Ministry of Finance stated with reference to the new regulations that these are evidence of the Government's determination to act vigorously further to consolidate the nation's economic and financial situation.

The measures relating to exports, said the spokesman, were designed to promote freer and larger movement of commodities which are to be handled to the greatest possible extent through normal channels of trade and finance.

The Government, the spokesman revealed, is taking further steps in this connexion to facilitate the effective transport of commodities in China and to remove impediments.

NO ALTERNATIVE

With reference to the Finance Ministry's official announcement, the spokesman indicated that the rates to be announced by the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications in connexion with the purchase of export bills will, until further notice, be based on a selling rate for telegraphic transfers of 7 pence and 13-5/8 U.S. dollar cents.

Regarding import prohibitions, the spokesman stated that the Government was reluctant to adopt these measures but had arrived at the conclusion that it had no alternative under existing conditions.

The spokesman stated he was confident any minor hardships that may be caused would be willingly borne by those concerned, bearing in mind the necessity for this action.—Central News.

DOMINION
MINISTERS
IN LONDON?

London, To-day.

Much interest has been aroused in British official circles by the suggestion, strongly revived by Canada's ex-Premier Mr. R. B. Bennett, that each Dominion should have a resident Minister in London.

It is understood in London that the question of closer and more rapid collaboration between Britain and the Dominions on international affairs is again likely to be raised shortly.—Our Own Correspondent.

MORE SHADOW
FACTORIES

London, To-day.

An official announcement may be made shortly of an extension of the "shadow" aircraft factory scheme.

It is reported in the meantime that three additional "shadow" factories are to be completed in the Midlands for the production of aircraft engines or aircraft engine parts.

These factories, it is believed, are to be managed by motor companies.—Our Own Correspondent.

U.S. WOMEN AMBASSADORS OF GOOD WILL TO BRITAIN:

HOW KITCHENER WAS DEFIED

Censor Beaten By Sir Ian Hamilton

HOW GEN. SIR IAN HAMILTON DEFEATED ATTEMPTS BY THE CABINET TO CENSOR AND "TONE DOWN" HIS DISPATCHES FROM THE DARDANELLES IS TOLD IN "WHEN I WAS A BOY," A VOLUME OF HIS EARLY MEMORIES, (FABER AND FABER, 18s.)

Sir Ian Hamilton, who is nearly 86, writes whimsically of his style: "It is a pity — a hell of a pity — but what can I do with a style systematically corrupted, by the necessity laid on me, from 1882 to 1915, of having to make drafts by the thousand for autocrats — real autocrats, Secretaries for War, Commanders-in-Chief and Governments of the Dominions and Commonwealth, every single one of whom — save Sir George White — was bitten with a strange fancy for 'making my drafts their own' by running their pens through any phrase not worn as threadbare as a lodging-house stair-carpet by common usage, and substituting a piece of the stair carpet?"

"Even when I became a Commander-in-Chief myself, Government — no less — insisted on trying to word my own despatches for me — 'tone them down' for me they called it.

"ABLE TO RESIST"

"Here, being desperate, standing as I was between the devil and the deep sea, I was able to resist. My despatches were returned as amended by Lord Kitchener and the General Staff.

"All the names of units were cut out. I was made to say 'a certain unit' instead of the Lancashire Fusiliers. Any reference to my lack of munitions or of drafts to replace casualties was deleted, and I was ordered to sign this doctored despatch.

"I flatly refused; and as in England thumbscrews cannot yet be applied, and the public were hungry for news, after some delay I won."

Sir Ian's early memories cover only the first 20 years of his life, but they are extraordinarily vivid and detailed.

They provide a picture of life in the 'sixties, on the estate at Hafton, near Glasgow; at Cheam, where he underwent torture from a heavy-handed headmaster; at Wellington and at Sandhurst, with an interlude in Dresden during the Franco-Prussian War.

Miss Sara Bulette, one of the 300 American women attending the Conference of the Associated Country Women of the World in London, paused before reading her paper there and apologised to her English sisters.

She referred to a report that the Americans found London women "snooty." English men were said to be grand, but English women

"I want to make it very clear to any English women here," said Miss Bulette, "that any such 'attitude' of American women to English women has been twisted and is entirely incorrect."

The suggestion that they think, or have spoken, slightly of their English hosts has annoyed the American delegates. It has added to an initial indignation aroused by suggestions that they were "women from the backwoods," seeing civilisation for the first time.

NOT FROM BACKWOODS

Miss Meta E. Grace, a leading American delegate, from Birmingham, Alabama, and an official of the Co-operative Extension of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, said:

"We do want it to be realised that we are Americans and Canadians, representing various associations, federated clubs, garden associations, the Co-operative Extension Department of the Ministry of Agriculture, State leaders and Government officials.

"Many of us come from farms that may be 40 or 50 miles away from a town, but this does not mean that we live in the backwoods.

"We believe this mixing with women of other nations will make our understanding and our knowledge greater, and will make the future of the world more enlightened. We want to pool our knowledge and to pass it on to those in America and Canada whom we represent.

CHARMED BY ENGLISH WOMEN

"We particularly deplore any suggestion that we do not find Englishwomen entirely charming. Please make this quite clear," said Miss Grace.

"We like Englishwomen very much. England is giving us the choicest entertainment she affords. We find England all that we expected and even more. Your country's gracious hospitality exceeds our expectations."

OVER 20,000 JAPS. KILLED IN A FORTNIGHT

SHANGHAI, YESTERDAY. THE CLAIM THAT 20,567 JAPANESE TROOPS WERE KILLED IN THE SECOND HALF OF JUNE IS MADE BY THE CHINESE MILITARY AUTHORITIES IN CHUNGKING.

Altogether 250 battles are stated to have been fought in this period, in which it is claimed that Japanese material losses included 11 gunboats, 100 and 44 tanks destroyed.

It is further claimed that 14 kilometers of the Japanese lines of communication were destroyed behind the Japanese lines by guerrillas in the same period.

ENGLAND PASSES AN EXCITING WEEK-END: MORE I.R.A. OUTRAGES

London, To-day.

The country has passed through an exciting week-end, no fewer than eight bomb outrages, a great conflagration and a fire on board a ship having been reported.

The bomb outrages occurred in luggage rooms on railway stations at Derby, Leicester, Birmingham, Stafford, Nottingham, Coventry, Warwick and Kettering. All the explosions took place between 3 and 7 a.m. yesterday.

The police have already ascertained that the nature of the outrage in each case was the same, and it is assumed that the Irish Republican Army is responsible.

All the bombs were time bombs. In two cases, at Derby and Leicester, a man was injured.

In Birmingham, the damage was more severe, as most of the luggage room was shattered and doors and windows in adjoining rooms broken.

The fire brigade had to work hard for several hours in Birmingham to put out a fire started by the explosion.

At the seven other places, damage was not as bad as at Birmingham, but the police report says it was "considerable."

A far-reaching investigation into the outrages has started.

LEEDS OIL FIRE

In Leeds, an oil refinery caught fire yesterday morning, about 300 tons of oil being destroyed.

The flames, says an eye-witness, at times shot up several hundred feet in the air.

All fire-brigades in the Leeds district were called out to prevent the fire spreading.

SHIP ON FIRE

At the East India Docks in London, the 1,500-ton steamer "Maria" took fire. The vessel had a mixed cargo on board.

About 120 firemen fought the hospital suffering seriously from blaze, six of them being taken to smoke and gas poisoning. The steamer is not regarded as lost.—Trans-Ocean.

RAIL TRAFFIC HELD UP

London, To-day.

A fire, the eighth in the last few days, broke out at Loughborough Junction.

Railway traffic from London to Croydon had to be suspended for an hour.

Cause of the fire is a mystery.—Trans-Ocean.

EXPLOSION IN THE STRAND

London, To-day.

Another explosion occurred in the Strand.

Thousands of people in the street mildly panicked, and a fire-engine extinguished flames which appeared on the pavement.

The explosion is thought to have been due to a leaking gas pipe. Traffic in the Strand was held up for 25 minutes.—Trans-Ocean.

SPANISH CABINET MEETING

Burgos, To-day.

The international situation was discussed by the Spanish Cabinet at a meeting presided over by General Franco.

After hearing reports from the Home and Foreign Ministers, the Council discussed the recovery

IMPERIALS CARRYING MORE MAELS

London, To-day.

Over a million and a quarter pounds of mail matter, approximately 50,000,000 letters, are now being carried every three months in the air lines of Imperial Airways.

This is an increase of just over 100 per cent. on last year's figures.

On Empire routes each letter travels an average of approximately 4,750 miles.

The growth of air traffic is also illustrated by the fact that during a recent three-monthly period, about 10,000 passengers travelled by Imperial Airways, compared with little over 7,000 in the corresponding period in the previous year.—British Wireless.

CLYDE YARDS BUSY

London, To-day.

Clyde shipbuilders, with a record amount of naval tonnage on hand, have launched since the beginning of the year naval craft aggregating 32,000 tons.

Four cruisers, four destroyers and a minesweeper are among the vessels floated.

Twenty-two shipyards on the river have all work on hand and several of the larger establishments have work which will extend over the next two years.

Two merchant vessels were launched during June, including a 10,000-ton tanker for Norwegian owners.

In six months the Clyde has launched 44 merchant vessels of 151,274 tons.—British Wireless.

ARAB MURDERED IN JERUSALEM

Jerusalem, To-day.

An Arab was assassinated yesterday in the Jewish quarter of Jerusalem.

Following a bombing attempt on an Arab cafe, the victim was killed in the street. The military court has sentenced the bomber to 10 years' imprisonment.

The court also sentenced the bomber's accomplice to 5 years' imprisonment.

BRITAIN INFORMED OF INTENDED NAZI PUTSCH

ALLIES WILL INTERVENE IF GERMANY ACTS

Warsaw, To-day.

Rumours of a strongly-worded Note demanding an explanation from the Danzig Senate for the recent German military moves, are still current.

According to press reports, further military transports arrived by water at Schichau wharf, in Danzig, on Saturday night. These are said to consist of light tanks and gun under-carriages.

It is stated that these armaments are being taken to the fortifications at Bischofsberg and Hagelsgert, and the approach to these two points is still barred to unauthorised persons.

It is understood that the Polish Commissioner, M. Chodacki, is returning shortly to Danzig after reporting to Colonel Beck.

The Government organ, "Gazeta Polska," carries messages from London and Paris informing the public that Britain and France will intervene if Germany attempts a putsch.

PUTSCH INTENDED

The London correspondent of the newspaper underlines this information by emphasising that the British public back up this stand.

The Conservative newspaper "Graz" publishes a report from London that the British Government had received information that such a putsch is intended now or in the near future.

The "Graz" professing to have no knowledge that this is contemplated, comments that if the recent German moves are simply a political manoeuvre, "Poland is grateful," because they have succeeded in clarifying the situation and "opening Germany's eyes."

WE DON'T WANT TO FIGHT BUT —

The paper points out that Poland is calm "but if Germany wants war with us we are not going to avoid it."

The independent organ "I.K.C." also publishes reports from London and Paris on the situation, including an unconfirmed rumour that the British and French fleets will visit Gdynia.

Significantly the entire press publish the British Council of Labour's manifesto to Germany with approving comments. — Reuter.

FLEET RUMOUR

London, To-day.

Nothing is known in official quarters in London regarding the rumour published in Warsaw that British and French warships will visit Gdynia. — Reuter.

FRANCO-BRITISH HELP

Warsaw, To-day.

The "Dobry Wieczor" in a message from its Paris correspondent says that the French Foreign Minister, M. Bonnet, again explained to the Polish Ambassador the French viewpoint towards Danzig.

M. Bonnet is reported to have declared: "In case Poland takes action to protect her vital interests in Danzig, she can fully rely on French and British help."

The newspaper says that if Germany in the Reich, "Poland will answer many tries to incorporate Danzig with force." — Trans-Ocean.

THREE KILLED ON BRITISH SHIP

London, To-day.

Three were killed and two severely injured when a steam-pipe burst on the British steamer "Baronsa."

The vessel was about to leave Liverpool for South America when the accident occurred. — Trans-Ocean.

ITALIAN AIR CRASH

Rome, To-day.

Two Italian air force planes collided during a practice flight near Viterbo and crashed.

PRIME MINISTER REPEATS BRITAIN READY TO FIGHT

"LET NO ONE MAKE A MISTAKE"

London, To-day.

A striking message from His Majesty the King on national defence preparations was read by Mr. Neville Chamberlain, the Prime Minister, during the course of a broadcast last night.

His Majesty, after referring to the great pleasure afforded him and the Queen in witnessing the march past of the National Service Volunteers in Hyde Park yesterday afternoon, went on:—

"To us it was a most impressive demonstration of the spirit of service which is everywhere present in the nation to-day and which shows itself in the determination to make the country ready to meet any emergency, whatever the sacrifices or inconveniences entailed.

"Our Civil Defence Force is now established. The call has been answered and volunteers are already at their work.

"I want them to know how much I admire their public spirit and I also want to express my appreciation of the wives who are giving up much of their home life to let their husbands spend their evenings in national service.

"I am sure that the volunteers, whether men or women, feel rewarded by the consciousness that they are helping to keep our country strong and safe.

WORTHY OF TRADITIONS

"As I watched the ranks march by, I could not help thinking also of the latest addition to our services of defence—the young men in our new militia whose prompt, cheerful response to the summons has shown them well worthy of the high traditions of the services they joined.

"I remembered, too, the reservists and territorials who had been called from their work and their homes to man our defences at this time.

"The country's thanks are due to all of them and to the personnel of those forces, regular and auxiliary, who have throughout firmly shouldered their great responsibility.

TO PRESERVE PEACE

"You know that all our preparations are designed not to provoke war but to preserve peace; we still preserve the hope that the nations may learn to live together in fellowship and harmony.

"But in the meantime, we are resolved to leave nothing undone to maintain our country's security and to that task the National Service Volunteers are making a contribution which deserves all our gratitude."

The Prime Minister added a few weighty remarks of his own, coupled with an unmistakable warning, on the conclusion of reading the Royal Message.

"We are living in critical and dangerous times"—he said—"we are ourselves a peaceful nation and we desire no quarrels with anyone.

PLAIN WARNING

"But let no one make the mistake of supposing we are not ready to throw our whole strength into the scale if need be to resist aggression, whether against ourselves or against those whose independence we have undertaken to defend."

In beginning the broadcast, Mr. Chamberlain said that the afternoon parade had been something quite new on our history, for it was the first time that our civil defence forces had been recognised as a fourth arm, standing side by side with the auxiliaries of the three fighting forces as a definite part of the organization of our country's protection.

This is a natural development following the realization that modern war is not longer what it used to be—a conflict confined to the armed forces of nations.

IN THE FRONT LINE

In these days, the civil population, too, is right in the front line and it becomes the duty of every citizen to help in the defence of the Home Front.

"It was for this reason," said the Prime Minister to his listeners, "that you were asked, all of you, to consider what you could do and what part you could play in national service.

"Your answer has now been given and within a few months you have added nearly one and a quarter million volunteers to our defence forces of all kinds.

"The spirit which has been shown by the National Service Volunteers has been beyond all praise.

COUNTRY'S CONFIDENCE

"Many of you, I know, are giving up your amusements and leisure evening after evening, often after a long day's work, in order to fit and train yourselves for effective service if at any time the call for it should come.

"Every day that passes sees a fresh advance towards perfecting our civil defence force in which you already begin to feel a pride like that which long existed in the fighting forces.

"The knowledge of what you are doing must greatly increase our confidence in our ability to face the future with calmness and equanimity."

The Prime Minister then read the King's Message. — Reuter.

THE HALF-MINISTRY

The Ministry of Supply Bill is a fairly adequate Bill—on paper. But it is one thing to have the Bill on the Statute-book and quite another to have a real Ministry of Supply. There is no guarantee at present that we are to have anything but a Ministry in name. Before there can be real satisfaction there must be assurance that we shall have a Minister who can get things done. (Mr. Burgin's record at the Ministry of Transport was singularly uninspiring). We shall also have to be satisfied that the department will be well staffed—that we shall not repeat the absurdity of the first Minister for the Co-ordination of Defence with (as the story goes) his single clerk and typist. If we had Minister of energy and force there would be some hope that more and more powers would devolve on him. At present we have a Minister with, according to the Bill, enormous powers that it is not the intention to exercise. In theory he will control the whole field of supply. He may "buy or otherwise acquire, manufacture or produce, store and transport any articles required for the public service," which covers not only the requirements of any Government department but articles "essential for the needs of the community in the event of war." The Minister thus has under his potential control not only the munitions industries proper but the essential civil industries and reserve stocks and materials. These, of course, are war powers. What the Minister can do in our present state of "near war" is limited.

His supply powers affecting Government departments are to be only such as are specifically entrusted to him by order in Council, and as we already know, he is (at the start at any rate) to deal only with problems of Army supply, certain War Office and civil defence stores, and the reserves of essential metals and other raw materials required for the defence programme. The Admiralty and the Air Ministry are not to be touched. The Ministry of Supply is, however, to be given another set of duties—the so-called "temporary powers"—which it would appear it is to exercise generally. It is to be the vehicle by which priority is secured for the execution of Government orders with requisitioning of labour and materials (alternative). It will be the instrument by which contractors can be forced to disclose their costs. It is to have the duty of enforcing on contractors their obligation to take protective measures against air-raid damage. These powers are independent of the particular Army supply duties with which the Ministry is charged. They are to be "exercised in consultation with other departments in so far as their functions are not transferred to the Minister of Supply." And, further, the exercise of priority powers will in general be subject to the control of a Ministerial Priority Committee to regulate the conflicting interests of the various departments. The Ministry is thus to have a curiously lop-sided composition. It is to be responsible for the very big job of creating the equipment and munitions for our rapidly growing Army—the branch in which the worst deficiencies appear. It is at the same time to busy itself with the adjustment of priorities not only for itself but also for the independent supply sections of the Navy and Air services. When it is added that the Minister of Supply is a man of less authority than the heads of the services whose claims he is to reconcile, and with whom he is in actual competition, the small importance the Government attaches to the department becomes clear. This is also evident from the inspired gloss with which the Bill was accompanied. The Government was at pains to point out that even such powers as the Ministry is given are really only held "in reserve"; there will be no need to exercise them if the "voluntary co-operation" of industry continues as at present.

The first thing the Government has to show is why this half-Ministry is likely to be more successful in delivering the goods than the full Ministry of Supply which all informed opinion—outside the Cabinet—has been advocating for months. There may be a strong case for allowing the Admiralty a great degree of independence in its specialised job but, after the experience of the last war, there is little for divorcing the requirements of the Army and the Air Force, which are now competing heavily for labour and which both depend for their expansion on tapping a wider range of the country's engineering resources. The Government gives the impression that it has not envisaged its task as inevitably it should, as comparable with that of the Ministry of Munitions during the war—in the mobilisation of as much of the resources of civil industry as we can safely spare and in the standardisation and mass production of its requirements. If, as the Government has argued, we shall certainly need a unified Ministry of Supply in war-time, why should we not have one now? It is sometimes said that any transfer now would slow down production, but as Sir Arthur Salter has pointed out, this need not follow if the new Minister shows ordinary prudence and no departmental sabotage is allowed. Current production and existing orders need not be interfered with, but we should get the advantage of the new industrial resources which it would be the job of the Ministry to bring in. It is much to be feared that the Government's Bill—in its practical effect—will be only another dose of that blessed remedy, "co-ordination," which, as we soon learned in the war, is no substitute for centralised control.

Friend Poses For Picture Of Torso Murder Victim

AIR SECRETARY WHO CRASHED, LAUGHED

ONE OF BRITAIN'S RICHEST BACHELORS, SIR PHILIP SASOON, FIRST COMMISSIONER OF WORKS, DIED RECENTLY AT HIS HOME IN PARK-LANE, W. HE WAS FIFTY. HE COMBINED MANY INTERESTS IN HIS ACTIVE LIFE — POLITICS, ART, SPORT, FLYING, SAYS A BRITISH JOURNAL.

He took great care of his health. He never drank, and smoked little. About a month ago he had influenza, which developed into a streptococcus infection of the lung.

Sir Philip kept fit by playing squash winter and summer at the Bath Club, tennis and golf.

He possessed a great love for the beautiful things in life. Art, pictures, period furniture, decorative schemes and flowers were all enthusiasms with him. He was considered to be one of the finest connoisseurs of art.

He owned three beautiful houses, at Park-lane, Trent Park and Port Lympne. At Park-lane he kept most of his valuable collection of pictures by Gainsborough, Velasquez, Sargent and Jose-Marie Sert. At Park-lane one of his most treasured possessions was the original of Earl Haig's famous Army order of March 1918, in which he told the troops they were fighting with their backs to the wall. When the order was issued Sir Philip was Earl Haig's secretary.

Photographed In Her Costume

London, June 18.

An attractive blonde stood in a photographer's studio at Leeds police headquarters yesterday, wearing the dark costume coat in which 20-years-old Ethel Wraithmell, victim of the Leeds Torso murder, was dressed when she disappeared.

The girl, Ada Pearson, aged 20, of Northfield-terrace, Leeds, was playing her part in an attempt by camera and artist's brush to reconstruct a life-like photograph of her closest friend.

A picture of Ethel Wraithmell's head after death is the only photograph the police have so far. This has handicapped them in their efforts to clear up her movements and the mystery of where she lived in the last three days before her death.

When the experiment of reconstructing a photograph was suggested, Ada, who is in build almost identical to the murdered girl, volunteered to help. "It was an ordeal putting on that costume," she said to the "Sunday Dispatch" afterwards. "But I would do anything to help to bring Ethel's murderer to justice."

"I tried on her shoes, but they were too big for me. I knew Ethel Wraithmell as 'Shirley.' She was a close friend. Only a week before she was found dead she offered to give me her costume as she said someone had promised her another."

If the police are satisfied that the reconstructed photograph is a faithful likeness, it will be given widespread publicity.

Superintendent Craig, chief of Leeds C.I.D., issued the following statement last night:

"The police are anxious to get into touch with a man whose name is Albert Davis or Davies, known as 'Curly' or 'Darkie.'"

HIKERS IN SEARCH

"Aged 25 to 27, 5ft. 5in. or 5ft.

7in., stiff build, black curly hair, clean-shaven, sallow complexion, foreign or Jewish looking.

"Dressed in dark clothing, muffler, and no hat. He is believed to have left Leeds on June 6."

This week-end every hiker and cyclist in West Yorkshire joined the police in a big new effort to find the leg and arm missing from the torso.

The police have not yet traced a woman, dressed in blue, who was seen with Ethel Wraithmell at 7.30

BRIDEGROOM KILLED ON WEDDING EVE

Unaware that John Alfred Wickham, 22, a motor driver, of Linden-crescent, Kingston, Surrey, whom she was to have married had been killed in a midnight car crash in which she was injured, Miss Gertrude Lynn, 18, of Deacon-road, Kingston, lay in Kingston Hospital deliriously calling out his name.

News of her fiancé's death had been kept from her. He died in the same hospital from injuries received in a collision with a tree on Kingston by-pass while driving Miss Lynn and her brother home after a day in the country.

Less than half an hour before the wedding was to have taken place, the girl's father, accompanied by her two sisters, called at Kingston register office and cancelled the ceremony.

AN ORIENTAL?

They have also issued another appeal to the writer of an anonymous letter to Supt. Craig, offering information if her name and address were kept secret.

A theory, suggested by the mummy-like bandages round the head, that an Oriental may have committed the crime is being investigated.

Secret London Factory

FORGERY GANG HITTING THE BANKS HARD

London, June 18. Continental police and bankers are interested in the operations of a forgery factory known to be situated in London; but, so far, its site has not been located.

The mystery factory is believed to be responsible for the production of forged credit notes, usually on small Continental banks or financial agencies, now circulating in greater numbers.

These forgeries are said to be of exceptional quality, and it is not easy to detect them.

Foreign banking interests have lost considerably, and strong measures are being taken.

While they are certain about London being the centre of the credit-note forgery, the police and bankers are less certain about the source of the forged Bank of England notes now being put into circulation throughout Continental countries.

CUSTOMS EVADED

Even in Paris and other large Continental towns, where the notes usually pass through the hands of expert "tellers," the distributors of the forgeries have achieved much success.

Another point troubling the investigators is the manner in which the forgers get their notes in bulk across frontiers, despite the vigilance of the usual Customs staffs.

Special officers of the French Surete Nationale and corresponding organisations in Switzerland, Holland and Belgium have been at work for some time trying to pick up the trail of the distributing agents, but, so far, have not succeeded in making arrests.

The First Of A Series Of Articles
Journalist On Mongolia, Which Th

THE BASE OF OR RUSSO-JAPA

TO the average European or American mention of Inner Mongolia is likely to bring up a surrealistic vision of dinosaur eggs.

There is more to it than that.

Mongolia is a collision ground for Russian, Japanese and Chinese influences—a possible theatre for the next great Far Eastern war—a chessboard of international politics, in which the simple, decadent, disease-riddled Mongols are the pawns.

I am making a seven-day journey through the Inner Mongolian corridor, that 300-mile wide ribbon of rolling plateau land which undulates from the Manchukuoan border for 700 miles westward along China's northern frontier. Right through the middle of this thinly populated zone of grass-land runs the Peking-Suiyuan Railway, which I have followed here, to its end, in China's far northwest.

SETTING UP BARRIER

Japan's grab of Inner Mongolia was envisioned in the notorious Tanaka Memorandum years ago. But it was not until the incident at Marco Polo bridge in the summer of 1937 gave them a suitable pretext that the Japanese militarists were able to carry out their long-conceived plan. What I have seen along this railway reveals strikingly how the Japanese are utilising the Mongolian corridor as a barrier between China and Russia, how they plan to utilising it as a springboard for further expansion into Central Asia and how they are preparing to thrust a dagger into the extended and vulnerable southern flank of Russia when the day of reckoning with that country arrives.

Militarily, Inner Mongolia is the most important of all Japan's territorial seizures since the occupation of Manchuria, for it prepares the way for Japan's supreme continental adventure—war with Russia. Everything which the Japanese are doing in Inner Mongolia is being done with that major objective in view. Japanese officials along the border talk about the next Russo-Japanese war as you and I would talk about next Saturday's bowls game—an event which has already been scheduled.

OUTER MONGOLIA NEXT

The Japanese army's immediate job in Inner Mongolia is to consolidate its military position, exploit the enormous reserves of coal, iron and wool and, most important, strengthening the puppet Mongolian government into a powerful military ally. The next move, all are agreed, would be an annex sovietised Outer Mongolia to Japanised Inner Mongolia—so that all the Mongolians may be united under one banner, as they were in the days of the great Ghenghis Khan. Thus are the Japanese pandering to the intense nationalism of the Mongolian people.

To-day the 3,000,000 or more pastoral folk who make up the Mongolian race are divided unevenly between Outer Mongolia, Inner Mongolia, Manchukuo and Russia. Their most fervent desire is to be reunited and independent, as of old.

Unless something else intervenes to set off the Russo-Japanese tinderbox, Japan's pan-Mongolian movement may yet be the cause of war. Outer Mongolia is twice the size of Inner Mongolia and separates it from Siberia in the North. A mutual defence pact binding Outer Mongolia to Russia requires the Soviet army to come to the assistance of its Mongolian protectorate if it is attacked. There is no reason to believe that Russia would "crawl" on this agreement, for Outer Mongolian is a vital cushion for Russian's Siberian defences.

JAPANESE ARMY IS COCKY

The Japanese will act against Outer Mongolia when they are good and ready—not before. But there is not much doubt that the eventual absorption of Outer Mongolia is as much a fixed feature of Japan's continental policy as was the seizure of Manchuria and the penetration of Inner Mongolia. If Russia is drawn in in the process, well, that will be just too bad—for Russia—in the view of the ever-cocky Japanese army.

The Japanese army believes its destiny lies not only north but west. It was easy for the Japanese to push along the Peking-Suiyuan Railway to its western terminus here. But there are still 1,500 miles to go to the beckoning and unexploited heights of Central Asia and the westernmost boundaries of China.

Far seeing Japanese envision the extension of the railway westward from Paotou, through the fringe of the Gobi Desert to Ninghsia Province, through Ninghsia to Kansu and finally up the panhandle of that slongated province into Sinkiang—or Chinese Turkestan—where Russian influence is strongly entrenched among the Tartars, Turks, Mongols and Mohammedan Chinese, who make up the bulk of the immensely ambitious might take years! But already is under way, with of an offensive 120 miles west of new terminus of yuan Railway.

Every foot of the present line of anti-Communist war the Japanese army up a barrier between China.

Instead they exact a tax for the

Somewhere on their long trek the camel caravans pass through the loosely drawn lines of two

JAPANESE COLONEL SEES SIGHTS

To reach Paotou from Peking,
I travelled all night and all day over the full length of the Peking-Suiyuan railway, accompanied by a colonel of the Japanese army.
The colonel, a portly, jovial person, was experiencing his first visit to Mongolia and was astonished that in 500 miles of travel he had seen no Mongols. The fact is that Chinese colonisation along the railway during the last three decades has crowded most of the nomadic Mongols out of the railway zone and into the plains on either side. The cities along this Inner Mongolian railway—Kalgan, Tatung, Houho and Paotou—are populated almost exclusively by Chinese. Mongols are seen only when they ride in from the countryside to make purchases and see the sights.

When our colonel got his first glimpse of a Mongol, as we clattered into Paotou on a bus, bedlam broke loose. The bus was ordered to a jarring halt and the colonel led me and several fellow correspondents, with cameras cocked, in a charge on a hapless bevy of longbraided Mongol women. For a few seconds the simple tribes-folk wavered irresolute and fearful as the foreign devils bore down on them. But they decided, finally, to hold their ground and submitted good-humoredly to the clicking of shutters. From that time on, Mongols became plentiful and were soon no longer a novelty even to the colonel.

TRAFFIC ON YELLOW RIVER

The products of Central Asia reach Paotou not alone over the time-worn caravan trail but also by way of the Yellow River, which skirts the city's outer wall on its winding course southward and eastward to the sea. In prewar days, huge amounts of raw material were freighted down the river on rafts of inflated goat-skins. But the outbreak of hostilities and the ravages of bandits have put a stop to this.

We passed the great iron-studded gateway and rode out to the bank of the Yellow River, which at this time of the year is a moving ribbon of thin, crinkled ice.
There were no boats on the river's 400 yard expanse, nor was there any sign of life.

Paotou, which is the leading wool-buying centre of North China, is a spanking new city as Chinese cities go, for it owes its growth and existence almost entirely to the railway. With a population of only 60,000, its outward appearance is much like that of other Chinese towns along the Mongolian frontier—a monotonous expanse of low, dun-coloured buildings so similar in shading to the sandy landscape that they seem a part of it.

PARADISE FOR WILD CHAUFFEURS

Life moved slowly here until the Japanese army came. Now the place is a paradise for wild-eyed Japanese chauffeurs who pilot their ponderous American trucks through the narrow streets with the speed and reckless of madmen. Donkeys, camels, dogs and pedestrians, who used to have the streets to themselves, hug the walls fearful when they hear the distant chugging of a Japanese military truck.

From the bastioned walls which surmount the highest point in Paotou we gazed out over a landscape that is typically Mongolian.
To the north the grass-carpeted hills roll in treeless swells to the base of the rugged but sterile Lan Mountains, which form an east-and-west backbone throughout the length of Inner Mongolia. To the west, across the glistening ribbon of the Yellow River, lies only sandy unpeopled wastes, the first barrier to Central Asia.

ALL OUR YESTERDAYS.

"Good party last night, wasn't it?"

"Er—yes—I suppose so. Somehow I don't seem to remember things very clearly. I've got a vague recollection of somebody wearing a fox."

"Yes. That was you."

"Oh, I see. Tell me, Philip—do you remember me being dropped head downwards from a great height on to a concrete floor, by any chance?"

"Slight headache, eh?"

"Philip—I wish I had your flair for understatement. I feel as though I had lived on an exclusive diet of iron filings and broken glass for the last five years.
What amazes me is that you seem to be so disgustingly cheerful and bright this morning."

"I know. It must be very exasperat-ing. A medicine man warned me to stick to 'Gimlets' at parties. So I always take the precaution of bringing my own bottle of Rose's Lime Juice. You may cock a sceptical eyebrow, Edwin—but it works."

"How?"

"Rose's Lime Juice is the latest thing in therapeutic agents. It restores the metabolic balance. In simple non-scientific parlance—suitable for a mind such as yours, Edwin—it prevents hangovers."

"Why—oh why—didn't you tell me
this last night?"

WIDOW OF EXECUTED MAN REMARRIES

"For Children's Sake"

Police guarded the bridal car of Mrs. Evelyn Butler, widow of William Butler, who was executed two months ago, when she remarried at Teddington. The bridegroom was Mr. Ernest George Thurlow, and the ceremony passed off without incident.

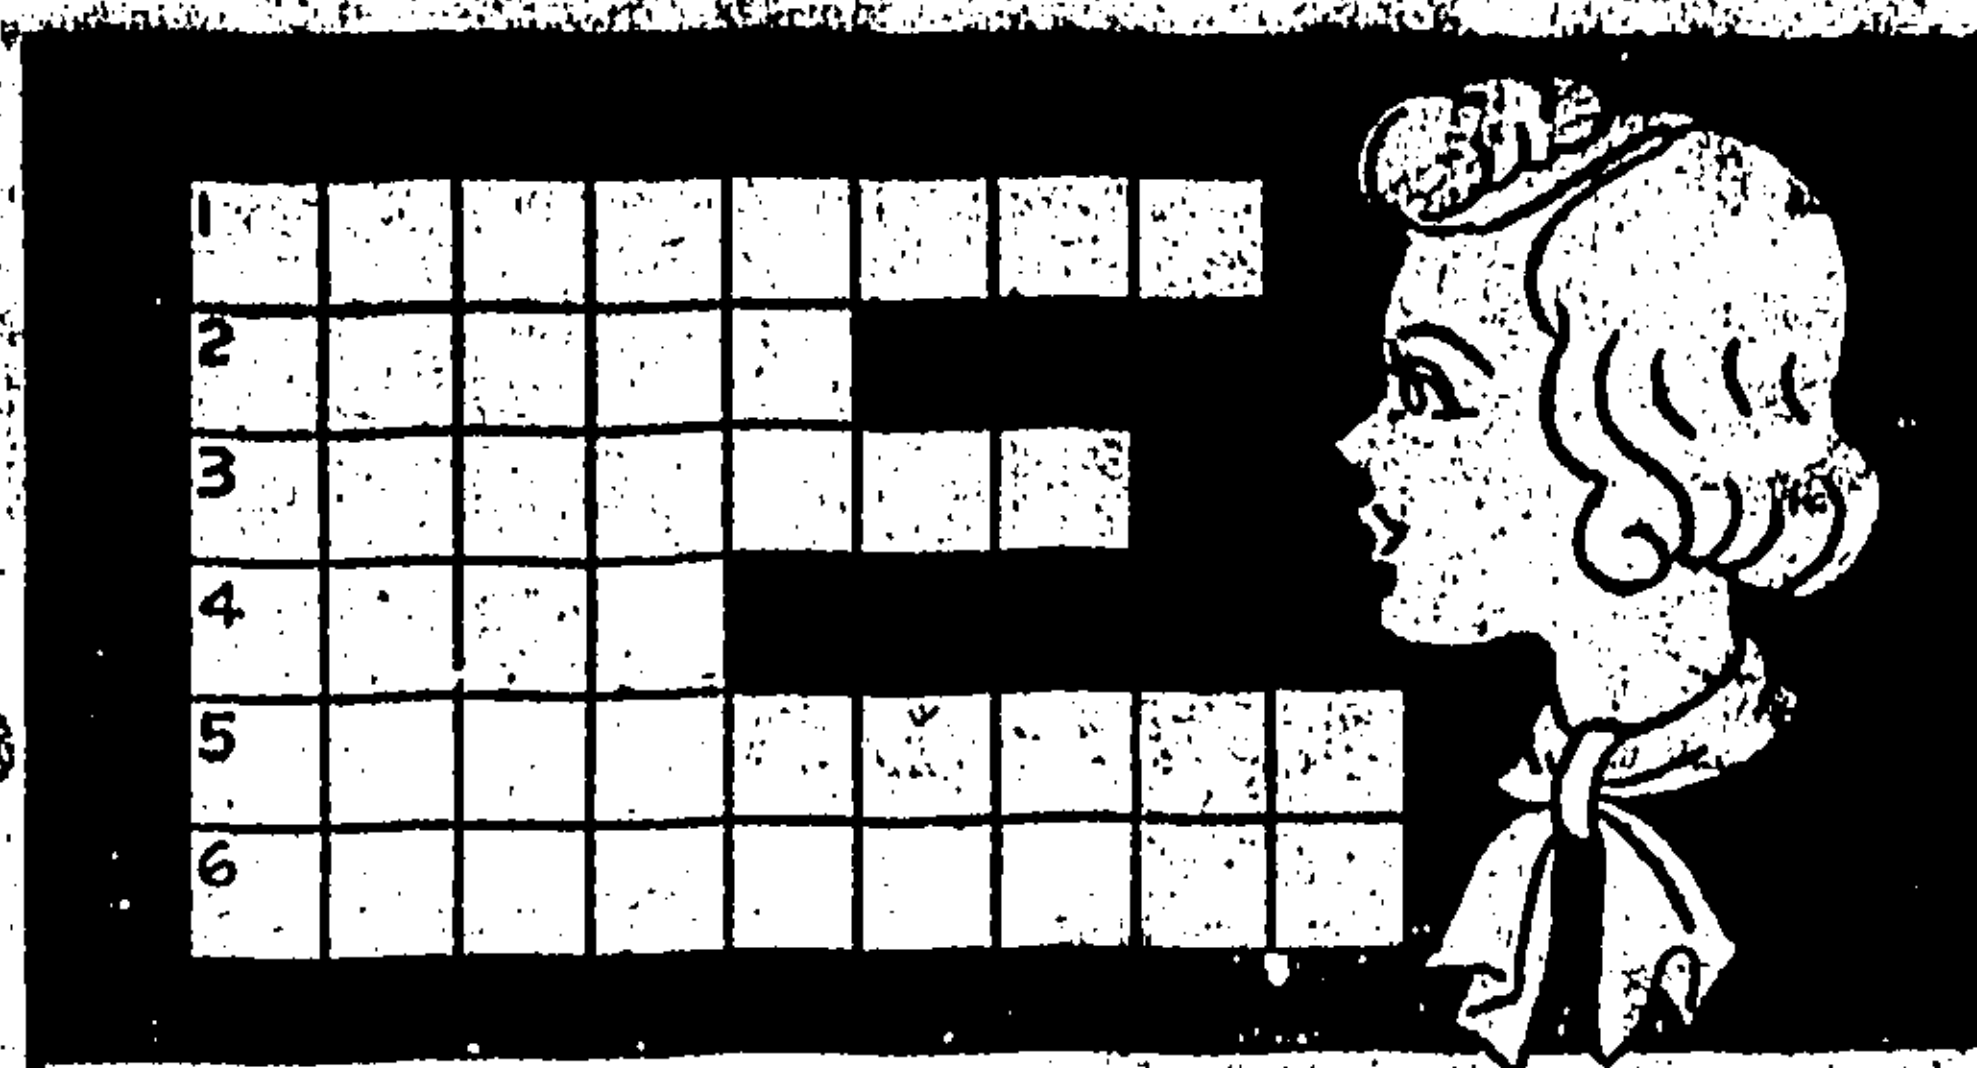

Mrs. Thurlow said, after the wedding:

"I have married purely for my children's sake. I shall change their name to Thurlow. Both my daughters think that their daddy was killed in a war, and I am having his name inscribed on the tombstone of one of my relatives so that they can go and put flowers on what they think is their daddy's grave."

Mr. Frederick Butler, aged 58, father of the executed man, gave away the bride.

Butler was executed for the murder on Christmas Eve in the Surbiton shop of Ernest Percival Key, a 64-year-old jeweller.

TEN ESCAPE FROM BLAZING YACHT

When the yacht Venture was burnt out on Lough Derg, a 24-mile long and two-mile wide expansion of the river Shannon, ten passengers, including the owner and his wife, had narrow escapes.

The owner, Mr. George N. Jessop, of Maryboro', an Irish business man, was on a fishing trip. When the yacht was in the middle of the lough, flames shot up from the engine-room after a back-fire.

The passengers were put into the dinghy.

A few moments later the whole of the deck of the yacht was in flames and soon afterwards the yacht heeled over and sank.

W.T. WANG CREATES GOOD IMPRESSION BUT LOSES

Fine Strokes But Unable To Stand Conditions

Dr. Tyau Does Well In Mixed Doubles Exhibition Match

GENERAL impression among spectators at Chinese Recreation Club yesterday afternoon at the charity lawn tennis exhibitions was that W. T. Wang, former Shanghai player now turning out for South China in "A" Division of the League, is little inferior to Tsui Wai-pui, colony tennis champion.

Conditions yesterday for spectators were killing! Heavy rainfall of the early morning combined with the hottest sunshine of the year made the ground steam. What it must have been like for the players can well be imagined!

It is not surprising therefore that neither Tsui nor Wang were at their best throughout. Following some brilliant exchanges, both men were apt to have prolonged lapses whilst they endeavoured to restore flagging energy.

With but a little more concentration it is quite possible that Tsui would have won in straight sets. After a rather weak opening, he settled down and led 5-3 and was playing well enough at that stage to indicate that he would have little further difficulty in taking the set.

Wang made a gallant come-back, however, and driving accurately on both hands and maintaining constant pressure from the net, he crept up to level, dropped the next game, but then went out at 8-6.

The second set was a complete anticlimax. Wang, although he was not winning games, held his own in the rallies at the outset. When Tsui had obtained a commanding lead, however, he simply gave up trying and whilst Tsui was winning the last two games for the set, the play was quite ludicrous, Wang not attempting to return anything not right on his racket.

After Wang had taken advantage of Tsui Wai-pui (C.R.C.) beat V. T. Wang (late of Shanghai and now of South China A.A.) 6-8, 6-1, 6-3.

SCORES

Lau Fook-kee and Mrs. Chiu Chun-chiu (C.R.C.) beat Dr. P. Tyau and Miss Yeung Wai-bun (S.C.A.A.) 6-4, 6-4.

H. D. Rumjahn (I.R.C.) and Tsui Yun-pui (C.R.C.) beat Tsui Wai-pui (C.R.C.) and Szeto Bick (South China) 6-4, 7-5.

the interval to bath and change, he came out a different man. Playing brilliant attacking tennis for which Tsui could find no counter, he swept through the first three games and then led 3-1.

AMAZING REVERSAL

Then came an amazing reversal of form. One minute Wang was playing championship tennis, the next he was a spent force. Tsui sailed gaily through the next five games without being extended and what had promised to be a great final set, fizzled out tamely.

It was subsequently discovered that Wang had developed cramp and he was unable to take part in the doubles exhibition as arranged.

His lapses notwithstanding, Wang created a very favourable impression. He has all the strokes of Tsui—possibly not quite as potent a service—but in yesterday's terrific heat, the sustained net attack which is obviously his favourite method of campaigning, took a good deal out of him and it is not surprising that he was not able to stand up to it physically.

Next item on the programme was a mixed doubles match between Dr. Phillip Tyau, better-known to the local tennis world as S. C. Dew of South China, partnered by young Miss Yeung Wai-bun, against Lau Fook-ki, veteran C. R. C. League player and Mrs. Chiu Chun-chiu.

Dr. Tyau is not the ideal mixed player—he has little confidence in his lady partner—but he revealed a sound knowledge of the game and his successes in "B" Division are quite understandable.

Lau Fook-ki, after an indifferent start, was also very sound, his canny placements earning many points.

Of the two ladies, Mrs. Chiu, with her vast experience, was the better player but Miss Yeung served fairly reliably and revealed a beautifully free back-hand drive. In other phases of the game she was too erratic.

Owing to the inability of Wang to play in the doubles, Szeto Bick partnered Tsui Wai-pui against H. D. Rumjahn and Tsui Yun-pui and lost 4-6, 6-7. Wai-pui's efforts in his single affected his game considerably.

TODAY'S TENNIS

The Chinese Recreation Club and South China match fixed for to-day having been postponed, the following is the revised "A" Division programme:

C. de R. v C.R.C.
H.K.C.C. v H.K.U.T.C.

ed North in 1935 to secure victories over Shanghai's leading woman players.

JUST one more Hong Kong player —G. R. M. Ricketts, formerly out here as a member of the staff of Messrs. Butterfield and Swire. This lanky young man, an Interport cricketer in 1935 and 1936 and runner-up to S. A. Rumjahn in the Colony singles in 1935, won the men's doubles in the Cheltenham tournament last year in partnership with A. Hamburger.

The standing of this tournament will be better appreciated when it is stated that such a player as K. H. Sin-ke, who won the singles final from G. E. Godsell, was among those who participated.

SPORTS PARADE

THIS may be rather a blunt statement to make but it is very true nevertheless—the standard of Hong Kong tennis is not high!

After watching players like Tsui Wai-pui in action in the local championships and being roused to some enthusiasm by a success such as his recent one over A. Sanchez, the Philippines No. 1 ranking player, tennis enthusiasts might be inclined to the opinion that our tennis is pretty high-class!

When one considers the displays by our leading players in the past against touring internationals, however, one realises that that optimistic view is rather too optimistic! Rarely are local players, on leaving the Colony, heard of again in connection with tennis.

There are one or two, however, who are making names for themselves and through fairly obscure beginnings might yet reach the realm of international tennis and thus give us some reflected glory in which to bask.

Two such players are Kenneth and Warwick Shute, the twins from Central British School, who caused something of a sensation a few years ago when they made their first appearance in the Colony tournaments at Hong Kong Cricket Club in shorts and school caps.

Aged about 12 at the time, these two players, whilst showing a remarkable aptitude for the game, did not impress particularly as stroke players. Their supreme confidence in themselves and their complete lack of nervousness, combined with great tenacity, however, made them opponents to be respected, as several more mature players—inclined to take matches with them patronisingly—found to their cost.

That their experience in Hong Kong tennis did a great deal to strengthen their game is borne out by their record at Home during the year.

I have not a complete record of their tournament activities, but perusal of Dunlop's Lawn Tennis Almanack for the current year reveals some outstanding successes for them in major juvenile tournaments.

In the Boys' Singles Championship of Britain, Kenneth reached the fifth round where he was beaten by D. G. Smart, the subsequent winner, by 3-6, 6-0, 6-2.

In the doubles, the brothers did even better, reaching the final and only succumbing to D. N. Hardwick and P. E. Hare after a great three-set struggle. The Hare, here mentioned, is, incidentally, a brother of Charles Hare, British Davis Cup player, and a boy for whom a great future is predicted.

In the Public Schools' tournament, the Shutes did even better. Representing King's, Rochester, they scored an overwhelming victory over M. D. N. Cobbold and J. Michelmores (Charterhouse). In the final, dominating the match to such an extent that they did not concede a game.

I shall follow the futures of these two former Hong Kong residents with great interest.

BEFORE leaving juvenile tennis at Home, I might mention noticing the name of a former Hong Kong woman player among former junior champions of England. This will probably not be news to a great many but the Miss Nora Mackintosh, who won the title in 1927, is none other than Mrs. Nora Mackintosh, who was married in Hong Kong about five years ago and who has played for K.C.C., U.S.N.C. and Strayall. HOME CRICKET

Adventurous Spirit Abroad

London. — With the process of events in the first month of this new season — in the big cricket sense — there are reasons for satisfaction. Apart from a period when rain and cold made progress difficult, there has been a lot of very real cricket, with much to interest followers of the sport. Even enough, in fact, to bring them back to the game in increasing numbers.

Most intriguing of all has been the evidence of an adventurous spirit abroad.

This has been plainly shown in the number of declarations which have been described as sporting. Several of these have justified that description, because the counties, doing the declaration business in such a way as to leave the opposition a chance, have seen their challenges successfully accepted. We have had cases of counties rattling up the runs at the rate of 100 an hour being concerned in death or glory fights, which have happily ended in glory. So long as this spirit of adventure is maintained, big cricket is sure to flourish.

For my part, writes Leslie Ames, I do not recall the first month of any season in which the public which watches cricket has been treated to so much adventurous play or so many 6's.

HITTING SIXES

There is no denying the fact that the watchers love those occasions when the ball is hit "out of sight." The bowler doesn't really object to it either, because he feels—rightly or wrongly—that the batsman who is hitting the cover off the ball is more likely to get out than the one who is steadfastly defending his wicket and waiting for the runs to come.

This idea that the hitting of 6's is worth while should, in my view, be encouraged from the all-round standpoint. That being so, one wonders why, after so many years of cricket, we should be so far removed from a standard boundary. Between hitting a 6 on one ground and on another there is a vast difference. Indeed, it can be said that there are cricket grounds in England where the "carry" is so long that the batsmen are more or less scared of even attempting to hit a "sixer."

On the other hand, there are grounds where a 6 is comparatively easy. So far as batsmen who are expected to get runs are concerned,

Hats Off To The Teachers

Men Who Are Maintaining The Football Standard

Efforts Being Made To Keep Youngsters Fit

Edinburgh, June 3.

THOSE who attended the schoolboys' international match at Tynecastle recently were no doubt delighted with the fare, but it is unlikely that they gave much thought to the work done to enable the match to take place.

Throughout Scotland there are hundreds of teachers, probably players of the past themselves, who are giving hours each week to teaching the young generation how to play football, seeking the proper positions on their behalf, and eventually, from thousands of boys, selecting district and national teams.

the hitting of 6's is a very real science.

Probably all sorts of reasons could be advanced against a standard boundary, but it does seem strange that the same hit, on different grounds, should have such a different fate.

SIGHT-SCREENS

In other directions, too, surprise may be expressed that thus far we have not reached what might be called a standard of requirements. For instance, on some grounds there are sight-screens behind the bowler's arm at each end of the field. On other grounds there is only one sight-screen, and yet again on certain grounds there are no sight-screens at all.

Let us ignore, for a moment, all arguments as to whether sight-screens give the batsman an advantage he should not be permitted to possess. The point I am making is that either sight-screens are good or they are bad. Surely it is not unreasonable to suggest uniformity in this connection.

If you were a batsman in a county side you would realise the difference. Batting at one end you have a white screen behind the bowler's arm, giving you a clear view of the bowler's arm and the ball. At the other end the bowler's arm comes over against a dark background of spectators' coats, with possibly one of the spectators moving, and affecting the batsman's concentration, at the moment the ball is delivered.

BAD LIGHT QUESTION

This difference in the conditions as affecting the batsman is emphasised from time to time when discussions arise concerning the fitness or otherwise of the light for play. Already this season we have had such discussions, and at least one demonstration by the people who had paid to see cricket played. I am not arguing the merits or otherwise of any particular case. The spectators cannot possibly be the best judges as to whether the light is good enough, and there are no instruments to judge the light. The instruments remaining are the human ones—the umpires. Would it not be much more satisfactory if the decisions on this head were always left to them entirely, without any question of appeal, or without the mutual consent of the captains entering into it?

When people in general are becoming accustomed to concentrated entertainment, they are apt to regard stoppages at cricket, or delay in restarting after rain, with a sense of irritation. Umpires are entirely impartial, and it seems to me that spectators of cricket would be happier if they felt convinced that the umpire—and they alone—were giving a decision as to the fitness or otherwise of the pitch—or the light—for play.

The make-up of Saturday's winning team—which may or may not have been the best available—since selectors make mistakes—shows how thoroughly they did their work with boys from Fife, Lanarkshire and even Banffshire in the eleven.

These teachers do not require to go to such trouble and their voluntary efforts should not go unnoticed in these days when physical fitness is the country's call.

It is true that at certain big schools, a man's potentialities as a sports coach may weigh along with his academic qualifications in obtaining a teaching post, and in that case it is only right that he should be heart and soul in the school's games, but the same cannot be said of the ordinary education authority school, although there is a possibility, now that physical fitness looms so large, that greater account will be taken of work on the sports field. So there is maybe, just time to doff our hats to the teachers who have, by their own efforts, and often enough with little encouragement, maintained a high standard of football in the Scottish schools.

Drift Towards Rugby

Nowadays there is a drift towards Rugby which is definitely a fine game for boys but one for older boys in my opinion. In any case a ground-keeping in Soccer for our public school-boys would undoubtedly improve their Rugby. Many a Rugby player seems to go through his field career entirely oblivious of positional play. That could not happen had he had a year or two with the round ball.

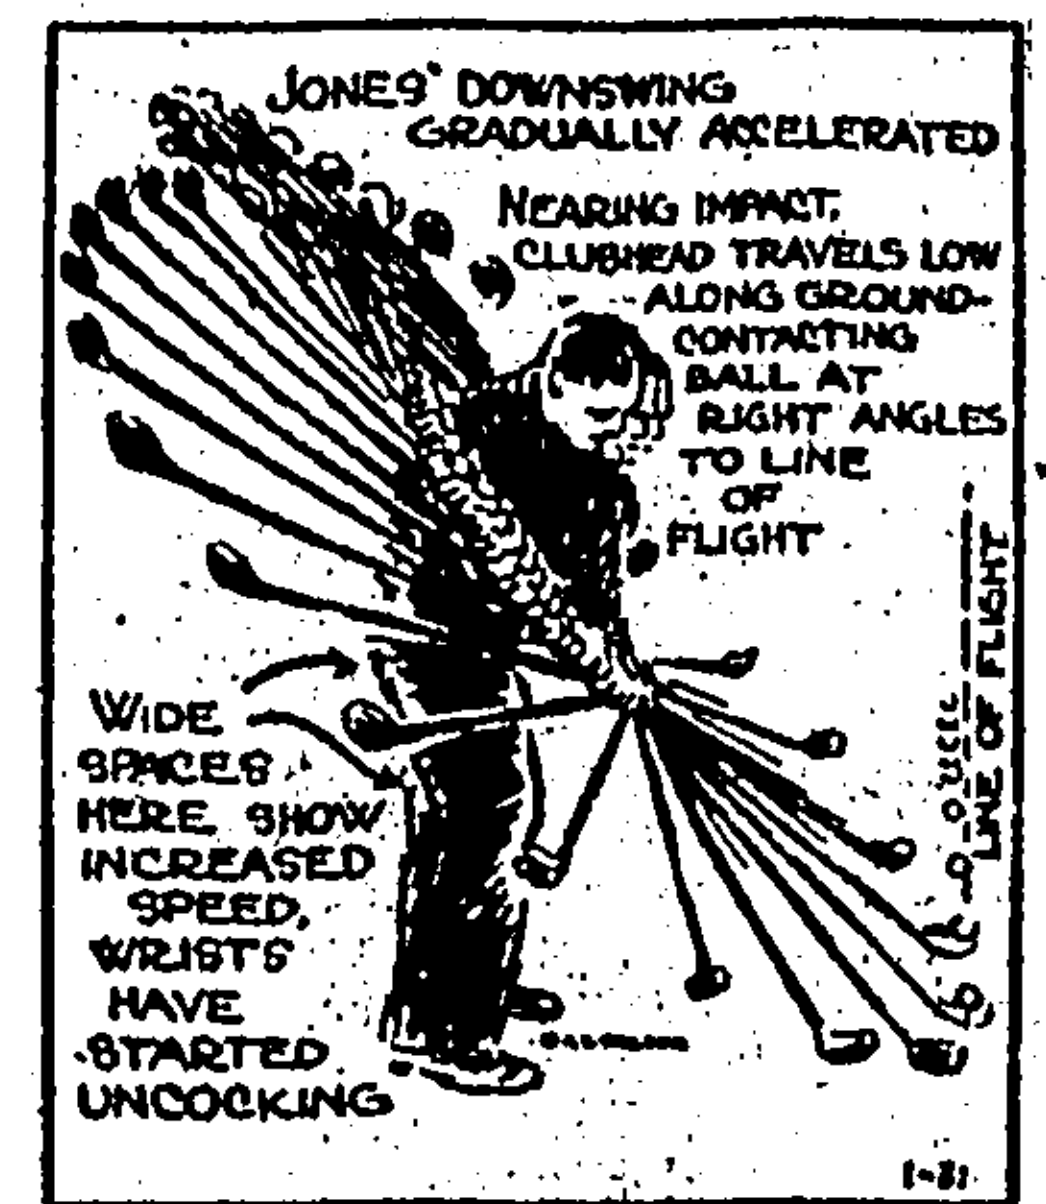

Baillie Sawers welcomed the boys' international teams last week and stressed the care that the Government and municipalities were taking in regard to the fitness of the boys in their care. It would have been interesting also had we heard Councillor Collart, of Edinburgh City, a well-known educationist, on football in the schools. None can be more concerned than he on the inroads being made by Rugby in the schools and I anticipate that some time he will be asking the Education Committee of Edinburgh to implement the ostensible promise made when they took a questionnaire on games.

Baillie Sawers also spoke of Edinburgh Corporation's part in providing fields for the players. Well, Edinburgh may be better served than some cities in that respect but it has still little enough to boast of. Lack of playing facilities is the bugbear of the fitness movement everywhere and probably in Edinburgh also.

The introduction of new games to the public parks, such as netball, volleyball, etc., designed to use the present parks to capacity, is not such a great advance. In good weather

SCHMELING'S COME-BACK

Stuttgart, To-day. — Seventy thousand boxing fans saw Max Schmeling, making his first appearance in the ring since he was badly battered by Joe Louis last year, win the German and European heavyweight championship when he beat the holder, Adolf Heuser, in the first round.

Schmeling launched a vicious attack from the opening bell and finally floored Heuser after 71 seconds.—Reuter.

the parks are used to capacity and the introduction of one game may only prevent boys or girls playing another game. In any case, some of the older established games are still the best—football (Soccer or Rugby), cricket, and hockey—though girls should get plenty of chances for net ball as the summer alternative to hockey.

Cluttered-Up Competitions

Football, of course, dies hard at this time of the year for a variety of reasons. The junior competitions get cluttered up, as do those of the juveniles, for the small associations and clubs like to have the field free for senior competition.

The juniors make money in the month of May, because there is such a vast public who will go to football under any conditions. Where there is something wrong, however, is when a club such as Rutherglen Glencairn, the Junior Cup winners, have to face up to five games in a week. The standard cannot be very good in view of that programme and one wonders how football scouts and managers make allowance for the hard programme undertaken by the youngsters.

Of course managers make mistakes, especially at this time of the season. Many a youngster is snapped up too hurriedly and whirled into League football at such a pace that he never settles. Just as one can count splendid youthful captures one can count the clever lads who failed because they were pushed along too quickly. I remember two cases in particular. Both Edinburgh lads—who went straight from juvenile football into League tussles and faded out. They were exceedingly promising players but they were not even ready to learn as they might have done with another season in, say, the junior ranks.

One has only to look at the free transfer lists to note the number of lads who may have wrecked their whole career—their apprenticeship perhaps as well as football—by rushing to accept a glowing offer from some League club. It is a pity that protection did not go a bit further for such young players who often end up right outside the game.

By BEST BALL

Bobby Jones' illustration above, taken with a new high speed camera which photographs each stage of the swing, shows clearly the speed progression of the clubhead as it descends. The time intervals between each picture of the clubhead shown above is 1/100th of a second. The greatest distance of course between the photographs comes as the wrist cock is unleashed and the right hand adds its power to the stroke. This fundamental has been stressed by golfers for a long time but the average player has often failed to be impressed for to the observer the downswing looks like one continuous high speed performance from top to bottom.

The path of the clubhead has been carefully grooved by Jones in the above illustration, coming down fairly close to the body and coming on to the ball from an inside out angle. This dispatches the ball straight ahead along the line of flight as the illustration shows. Had the clubhead been allowed to travel outside this path, it would perforce be brought onto the ball from an outside in arc, imparting a slicing tendency to the ball. The flattened arc as the clubhead approaches the ball near the turf is also emphasized in this picture. This allows a greater margin for error than is possible when the clubhead is brought onto the ball in a more upright swing.

Wednesday.—Correct Impact.

People have developed a habit of stating that cricket trials are of no consequence. That is not strictly correct. Trials held in the past have been rendered useless because the lessons they taught the selectors were never heeded.—R. J. Evans.

3NT Pass Pass Pass

Irrespective of what system you play, there are times when you should vary it. South, for instance, is definitely known to play the Four Aces notrump. Nevertheless in a recent game with a particularly weak partner he decided to make an irregular bid. West opened his fourth-best spade. The ten was played from dummy, the Jack by East. Declarer won with the King, cashed the Ace of clubs, led a heart over to the Queen in dummy and played the Jack of clubs, dropping the ten from his own hand. West won with the Queen and now studied the situation. He decided that Declarer must have the King of diamonds—after all, he needed it to warrant an opening Four Aces notrump. Accordingly, West played the Aces and another spade, clearing the suit for himself, whereupon Declarer cashed his remaining clubs and hearts, making his contract.

Yesterday you were David Bruce Burnstone's partner. Both sides were vulnerable and you held:

K 10 x x x
Q x x x x x x

The bidding:
You Maier Burnstone Jacoby
Pass Pass 1NT Pass
(?)

ANSWER: Your correct bid is to pass. Any takeout of one notrump is a constructive strength-showing bid that shows game possibilities. Since your hand shows none, you should pass and keep out of trouble.

Score 100% for pass, 30% for two hearts, 0 for any other bid.

QUESTION NO. 141

Neither side is vulnerable. Oswald Jacoby is your partner and you hold:

Q x x

Q x x
K 10 x x x

The bidding:

RUMANIA WILL DEFEND HER FREEDOM

BUCHAREST, TO-DAY.
"WE DESIRE NOTHING THAT BELONGS TO OTHERS, BUT WE ARE DETERMINED TO DEFEND THAT WHICH BELONGS TO US," DECLARED KING CAROL IN AN ADDRESS YESTERDAY.

King Carol was speaking to a deputation of members of the Chamber and Senate who had brought him a reply to the Speech from the Throne.

"Thanks to her great sacrifices," the King declared, "Rumania has attained her present position, and it is her duty to preserve intact the heritage she has received."

"We still find it necessary to continue to increase national defence, and to furnish the Army with modern equipments, to provide a sure shield to defend the frontiers of Rumania."

"Thanks to her prestige Rumania can follow energetically a policy of peace, honour and independence."—Reuter.

The present apparent deadlock in Nazi-Polish contacts may be broken by Polish representations to the Danzig Senate in the near future.

On Saturday night, Danzigers watched from Zoppot pier an illuminated procession of Polish war, merchant and fishing vessels through the bay, which marked the climax of the Polish Eucharistic Congress which had been taking place at Gdynia in the last few days.

General Haller, organiser of the Polish Legion in the French Army during the Great War, was on board one of the warships, together with Cardinal Halland and 12 Bishops.—Reuter.

The situation in the Far East will be discussed in the House of Lords on Thursday, says a British Wireless message from London.

London, To-day.

The Sunday newspapers emphasise in their comment on the international situation that now there is no excuse for anyone anywhere to misunderstand the position of Great Britain. The "Sunday Times" entitles its leading article "British intentions placed beyond doubt." The paper raises a memory of 1914 and the uncertainty which is alleged to have surrounded British policy at that time. It makes the point how different the position is to-day following the series of declarations by the Government. In "The Observer," Mr. J. L. Garvin says that Lord Halifax, in his speech, "has done what was most needed if there is to be the faintest chance this summer and this month for any peace that would not be a peace of disgrace and disaster." — British Wireless.

is no excitement here whatever. — Reuter.

BRITAIN DEFIED

Danzig, To-day.

The Nazi leader, Herr Foerster, speaking to a wildly cheering district party rally, declared, in words addressed to Britain and her allies: "We stand firm. We want to return to Germany and we are going to return to Germany."

"One word of the Fuehrer's carries ten thousand times more weight with us than all the war cries and lying provocation in the world."

"In Danzig no one need disturb himself — no measures by Poland can frighten Danzig."

BLOOD SACRIFICES

"If the Fuehrer brings freedom to Danzig then this German population will stand together as one man in brazen loyalty to the Fuehrer and Germany, and it will be prepared for any sacrifices the Fuehrer demands—sacrifices not only of goods but of blood and life."

"The encirclement powers are prepared, in opposition to all their theories of self-determination, to go to war in order that right may not be right but remain for ever wrong."

"They are ready to deliver Danzig to Poland rather than agree to fulfilment of the desire of the solid Danzig population for a return to the Reich." — Reuter.

London, To-day.

According to a Tokyo press message on the Tientsin situation, negotiations are expected to open in Tokyo on Wednesday. The British Consul at Tientsin and other local representatives have now arrived in Japan.—British Wireless.

A petition for the winding-up of the China Merchants' S. N. Company, on the grounds that it was impossible for the company to continue business owing to the Sino-Japanese hostilities, was presented by Mr. Eldon Potter, K.C., in the Supreme Court this morning; the case is continuing.

Counsel are: Mr. Eldon Potter, K.C., and Mr. H. O. Macnamara, instructed by Mr. D. L. Strellet, of Hollibron's; Mr. H. G. Sheldon, K.C., and Mr. Leo d'Almada, instructed by Mr. H. J. Armstrong, of Deacons; and Mr. T. F. Lo, barrister, who is to give expert evidence on Chinese Law.

In his petition, Mr. Potter said that the company was incorporated under the laws of the Republic of China in 1920, with head office in Chefoo, and had at all material times an office in Hong Kong.

Capitalised at $10,000,000, its principal business was that of ship-owners, carriers and general shipping business. The company had 20 ships, among which the Sheng Lee, Mao Lee, An Lee, Seng Lee and Hain Lee were now in Hong Kong waters.

Since 1938, the company had practically ceased business in Hong Kong and none of the officials of the company had visited the local office at any time.

In February, 1939, the Dairen Kishen Kaisha, a Japanese company, claimed to have received authority from the company to take possession of and control over the movements of the ships in Hong Kong and applied to the Harbour Master for clearance papers in respect of the Mao Lee and An Lee.

This was prevented by means of a petition. On February 21, 1939, the company was wound up in Chungking by special authority given by the Supreme Court of China on the previous day.

Owing to the Sino-Japanese hostilities, Mr. Eldon Potter's petition said, it was not possible to carry on business unless it involved the company in a breach of the laws of the Republic of China by trading with an enemy, or by seizure of the ships by hostile forces.
